Appomattox Farmer Uses V-Parlor to Make Money on His

Cows haven't always enjoyed the privilege of a parlor. Rapidly it's becoming the accepted practice.

An Appomattox County Farmer, D. S. Arrington, of the Piney Ridge Community, has just completed the first V-Parlor in the county. Arrington has invested $700 in parlor and milker. With 12 cows, this is a per cow investment of $53.81. A visit to the Arrington farm one cold rainy night readily showed some of the advantages.

The White House Milk Company, a subsidiary of the A. & P. food chain, now owns what was the Coble Dairy Products collecting plant. Officials of this company indicate that they are anxious to see more farmers milking some cows. Milk production can put additional dollars in Appomattox farmers' hands, thus upping net farm income of the county. It is conceivable that 400 producers could come into production. If their output were only 20 gallons each per day, this would amount to $760,000 in a year.

Arrington rented his farm for eight years and in 1951 purchased it with a F. H. A. loan. Since then he has gradually increased livestock numbers. He began by selling cream. In 1951 he started selling manufactured milk. 27% of his income is from the sale of manufactured milk.

In addition to milk, he produces flue-cured and dark fire-cured tobacco, hogs and sheep.

The V-Parlor is 12' wide and 21' long and accomodates two cows. Cows enter the parlor from a corner by walking up a ramp and stand on a 28" platform. The cows stand in the parlor in "V" with their rumps together. One cow is prepared for milking, fed and milker attached. While being milked out, the other is prepared and fed. Thus, there are always two cows in the parlor - - one being milked, the other prepared.

The entrance and exit doors to this parlor are controlled by ropes from inside, thereby permitting the operator to do the complete job of milking from one point inside the barn. With this arrangement, 1 man can very conveniently milk up to 15 cows per hour.

The cow-to-can milker was developed for the manufactured milk producer and sells for considerable less than a conventional milking machine. It has a smaller motor and compressor and milk flows from the cow through a strainer into a 10-gallon can.

For a farmer that could fit these elevated stalls in to a present farm building, the same convenience could be obtained from a much less investment.

The advantage of the V-type parlor and the cow-to-can milker is convenience, labor saving, more pleasant working conditions and the entire milking operation is confined to a small area in a very nominal cost. With this system, a higher quality product is produced.

When asked how he liked his new arrangement, Mr. Arrington's only comment was, "I like it. I'm well pleased."

WHEAT STRAW SURVEY

Will you have wheat straw for sale? That is a question being put to farmers in a seven-county area.

A well financed company is proposing to build a plant in the Danville - Altavista area which would use wheat straw as the raw product in the production of construction board. This board has high insulation values and is fireproof. They have a number of plants located in the west. This is their first venture in the east.

Before beginning construction, they need to be assured of an adequate supply of straw, which is 50,000 tons per year. A letter has been mailed to those wheat growers who grow 10 acres or more in 1959. There may be smaller producers who would like to have a market for their straw. If so, they should contact the county agent and complete a questionnaire before January 10. The firm proposes to pay $14.00 per ton for baled straw delivered to their plant at time specified.

This may afford additional return from wheat to many growers.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Moscow Mills, Mo.,

Dear Editor,

Have been reading your editorials! Why don't you plug Senator Humphrey for President? He is the only man since Roosevelt with the ability to get the country out of this mess it is now in. I have great respect for Harry Truman, but he, like Sam Rayburn and Clarence Cannon, is in the late years of his life, and they should realize that is imperative that the leadership and direction of the government be placed in the hands of younger men who are more physically able to take on the tremendous job now facing the leadership of this country.

Respectfully yours,
Robert W. Cawthorn.
